What's Happening:

It was so amazing watching the children connect with the feeling of being "Thankful." You are all such wonderful parents with kind hearted children. We are continuing with talk about being helpful and giving to others. I have been trying in being a "Bucket Filler" from our book Fill a Bucket: A Guide to Daily Happiness for Young Children by Carol McCloud.

Our homework boxes that most of us discussed during conferences will begin coming home this week with instructions and materials. They will be rotating every other week.

The children have been practicing speaking in front of each other as well as being a respectful audience. They get so excited to share and answer questions.

Special Note:

Thank you for the wonderful snacks. The children are practicing family style serving. They are pouring juice/water from small containers and serving their own snack with a variety of methods such as tongs, measuring cups and spoons. This is to enhance their fine motor skills. There is no need for single serve snacks or juice unless it is a savings. To follow up with a question from a few parents, we can have fresh cut up items such as fruit and cheese. I am also willing to try items like hummus and vegetables. This is something several of the children eat normally. Please let me know if there are any other suggestions.
